Dear Colleagues,

Eosinophilic esophagitis (EoE) has become a clinically relevant issue in the gastroenterological offices and clinics in recent years and has a massive negative impact on the quality of life of patients. Today, EoE is considered the second-most-common inflammatory disease of the esophagus and the most common cause of bolus obstruction. Fortunately, clinical research in the field of EoE is highly dynamic, with many new and clinically highly relevant findings.

In our symposium, we would like to give you a succinct overview on the current state of EoE research as well as practical advice on diagnostic and therapeutic questions – including current treatment options.

We would be very happy to welcome you at our symposium in Vienna,

Prof. Dr. Stephan Miehke and Dr. Arjan Bredenoord
